Anger at removal of tribute to Enniskillen bomb victims

Anger at removal of tribute

A photographic tribute to the victims of the Enniskillen bomb has been removed from a fire station in the town.

The removal follows claims that it could be in breach of equality legislation.

A photographic montage of the victims of the 1987 atrocity hung on the wall of the fire station in Enniskillen, County Fermanagh, until a few days ago.

A spokesman for the Fire and Rescue service said that it was taken down in order to maintain an inclusive, neutral and harmonious working environment for all its fire fighters; and also for all those in the community who use and visit the fire station.

Unionists have voiced their anger at the move.

I am angered at Enniskillen Fire Service at the taking down of the tribute to the 12 people murdered on Remembrance Sunday 1987. How can people be so petty. My father was one of the 12 to die that day and I am so disgusted at them for removing it.....

Until a decision is made whether it is in breach of the legislation or not it should not be removed.

The removal of the Enniskillen tribute is disgraceful. Whoever objected to it should be removed instead as they have caused offence to all right thinking people.

This is political correctness gone mad. The memorial to these poor souls should be reinstated immediately.

On 2 Oct at 10:33 - Mark from Antrim said:

How can this offend anyone? I think its sick that this has been removed. Is it because it was remembrance sunday or they just didn't like the picture? Time to catch yourselves on!
