Paul Quinn's funeral

THURSDAY

Most suspects in brutal farm murder 'From Northern Ireland.'

Most suspects in a murder investigation in a republican heartland of the Irish border are from Northern Ireland, police confirmed today.

Deputy Chief Constable, Paul Leighton, told the Policing Board most people involved in last month`s brutal killing of Paul Quinn, 21, were from north of the border.

Mr Quinn was abducted from Cullyhanna, south Armagh, and beaten with bars by up to nine men in a farm outbuilding in County Monaghan.

There has been concern that political power-sharing at Stormont between Sinn Fein and Ian Paisley`s Democratic Unionist Party could be jeopardised if family claims that the mainstream IRA was behind the killing are proved.

Mr Leighton said: "Most of the witnesses and suspects and so on would be on this side of the border and, to a large extent, what is on the southern side of the border is a crime scene."
