The memorial has been planned for several years but the length of time it has taken to erect the stone has caused discontent among the relatives.

The monument, which has still not been erected after eight years, has apparently been delayed by wrangling over the wording of the inscription on the stone.

A special working group at Omagh council has been debating over the form of words since the beginning of the year.

The families are to meet the Victims` Minister David Hanson in Omagh today to discuss the issue.
