Fresh delay in Robert McCartney's murder trial

The trial of the man accused of murdering Robert McCartney outside a Belfast bar has been hit by a fresh delay.

Terence Malachy Davison, 51, had been due to face the charge of killing the 33-year-old father of two at the city's Crown Court.

The hearing, which has already been hit by a series of postponements, is now due to start on Wednesday, 21 May.

Today's proceedings did not get under way because a barrister was held up at another trial.

Along with two other men - James McCormick, 39, and Joseph Gerrard Emmanuel Fitzpatrick, 47 - Davison was also due to face charges of affray in relation to the same incident outside Magennis's Bar in January 2005.

Sinn Fein has denied any IRA members took part in the killing.
