'I'll meet Sean's killer' – bomb victim's sister

UVF bomber became a preacher after his release

North Belfast News

04/10/2007

The sister of Sean Campbell, who was brutally murdered in a UVF no-warning explosion in 1977 has said she wants to meet the man behind the bomb. James 'Tonto' Watt was convicted of Sean's murder as well as that of Sean McBride who were both killed in the bomb which exploded during Trevor McKibbin's funeral in Ardoyne April 20 1977.

Kathleen Campbell said she wouldn't be able to meet the architect of her brother's fate in a television interview, like those filmed with Michael Stone last year.

"But I've always wanted to meet him. I think about him a lot. What he's doing," she said.

Bomb maker James Watt was a ruthless killer who was handed down nine life sentences for his role in the murders of both Mr Campbell and Mr McBride as well as ten-year-old Kevin McMenamin at an Easter Sunday republican parade on the Falls Road and UDR corporal John Geddis.

The UVF bomber, now aged 54, was eventually released from prison in 1989 having served 12 years. He became a born-again preacher in 1995. His father used to be the park ranger up on the Bone Hills playing fields. Before the Troubles began young James Watt played football with Sean Campbell's older brothers.
