Hundreds of Republicans from the North West attended Sunday's 'March for Truth' rally in Belfast which called for the truth to be known about collusion between loyalist 'death squads' and the British state.

Sinn Fein President Gerry Adams said the large turnout at the march sent "a clear message to the British state that we are determined to pursue the truth". He said it must also be accepted that some Republicans had colluded with the British and this too should be investigated.

Around 2,000 people took part in the march and many carried poster bearing details of murder victims. Dozens of black balloons were also released and a minute's silence held in memory of those who were said to be killed as a result of state-endorsed violence.

Speakers at a rally at Belfast City Hall included Amanda Fullerton, daughter of Bun-crana SF councillor Eddie Fullerton who was murdered in his home by a loyalist gang.
