The Omagh Help and Self Support Group says its campaign for a full public inquiry into the 1998 bombing will continue.

The group was speaking as hundreds of people gathered in the Co Tyrone town yesterday to mark the 10th anniversary of the blast that killed 29 people, including a woman pregnant with twins.

Relatives of the victims are continuing to demand a full, cross-border inquiry into claims that the police were warned of the attack in advance, but failed to prevent it.

Yesterday's memorial service was organised by a number of victims' families who boycotted the official council commemoration on Friday.
