Another man was charged last night with the murder of a leading loyalist during a bloody paramilitary feud in Northern Ireland.

The 42-year-old was charged by the Historic Enquiries Team with murdering Ulster Defence Association member Tommy English in Belfast in October 2000. The Police Service of Northern Ireland said he is due to appear at Belfast Magistrates Court today, also charged with membership of a proscribed organisation.

English (40) gunned down at his home in the north of the city, was one of several to die in a feud between the UDA and rival Ulster Volunteer Force. The latest accused is the ninth person to have been arrested and charged by the HET in connection with the murder and membership of the UVF in the past few weeks.

One of them was senior UVF man and alleged police informer Mark Haddock who is currently nearing the end of a ten-year sentence he is serving in Northern Ireland's top security Maghaberry Prison for an assault on club doorman.

Mr English was part of a loyalist delegation which took part in talks at Stormont in the lead up to the signing of the Good Friday Agreement in 1998.
